Abstract: In this article we aim to highlight the way in which the Romanian intellectuals in the interwar period relate to the Jewish problem starting from a brief presentation of the evolution of this aspect, as well as the particularities that make this issue different from the way it was treated in other countries. The Romanian interwar changed the situation of the Jews in Romania by offering them rights after long expectations and exclusions from Romanian politics and social life, while Romanian intellectuals became more and more involved in the Jewish issue.*
